

Guidelines for Evaluating an Agent

Evaluators use an evaluation form to assess agent performance. See Evaluating an Agent to learn more.

A person in charge, like an administrator or quality manager, creates evaluation form templates. Evaluators use these templates to record evaluations. The templates have questions and points for each question. Every evaluation form has a unique ID (found in the top-right corner). This ID is linked to each published or saved evaluation form. You can see the order of the evaluation by looking at the Metadata section in the Evaluation Form window.

To return to an unfinished evaluation form later, you can launch it via the ID link. You can also delete unpublished evaluations that are not used in calibrations. When you delete evaluation forms, they will not show up on the screen or in reports. But they stay in the database until they get too old and are removed.

When you evaluate with Experience columns turned on in Settings, you can see a link in the Experience ID and Experience Sequence column. Click the Experience ID link to open the Experience Viewer. It shows the Experience Level metrics and interaction level data for that Experience ID. To play the content, click next to an interaction. To evaluate an interaction, select it or use Ctrl + Click to select multiple interactions to check them simultaneously. View image

Editing a Published Evaluation

You can edit a published evaluation if your system is set up to allow this functionality and if you are:

- The original evaluator.
- Identified in the Grant access to field and you also have access to the template used for the evaluation.
- Assigned the Overrides Access Rights privilege.
- Assigned the Edit Published Evaluations by Others privilege and you have access to the evaluation.

If you meet at least one of these criteria for a specific evaluation instance, the Edit button is present in the Evaluation Form window.

Ignoring Evaluations

You can skip an evaluation for an agent. You can do this if the company policy says so or if someone thinks the evaluation is not showing the agent's true performance or doesn't fit the workflow (like a billing issue in a service inquiry workflow). There's no limit to how many skips are allowed, but the number shows up in the Agent Performance report.

The ability to use this feature is set by your system administrator and is set to default. To change the current setting, contact your system administrator.

You can select the Ignore this Evaluation checkbox to skip an evaluation during the evaluation. You can also do this after the evaluation is published. After an evaluation is ignored, it cannot be audited or re-scored. You can restore the evaluation by clearing the checkbox.

You can select to ignore a published evaluation if you are:

- The original evaluator.
- Identified in the Grant access to field, and you also have access to the template used for the evaluation.
- Assigned the Access all Evaluations privilege and you also have access to the template used for the evaluation.
- Assigned the Overrides Access Rights privilege.
